Italtan increases its production capacity and the quality of the finishes.

The aim is to maximise the results by reducing as much as possible the use of chemical agents in the name of economy and ecology. One thing is certain, at Italtan they hate waste. Over the last few years, Italtan, the tanning division already well-known and appreciated for the quality of its hair on baby calf, has concentrated on the production of high quality hides for the apparel industry where it holds a leading position as a reference player in this field. The production areas have also recently been refurbished. The offices have been restructured partially via the recovery of old instrumentation.

The lamps hang from staking arms or are inserted in hot water pipes, the desks have been created from old wooden tables previously used for other purposes, the claddings consist of off-cuts of raw packaging materials, then there are the accessories from the old tailoring instruments such as the iron sewing machine, and old fashioned mirrors and trunks for transporting clothes. Consistent investments have also been made in technology, an example of which is the new finishing department based on last-generation coating machines for ensuring the highest quality results.
